WHEELING, SEPTEMBER 2, 1893.

Is This a Studied Affront? Chairman Wilson, of the ways and means committee, has received a petition from Thomas A. Wadson and Samuel Masters, members of the colonial parliament of the Bermuda Islands, praying for a reduction in the tariff on products of Bermuda shipped to this country.

This petition, coming from the legislators of a foreign country to the head of a committee which is to frame a tariff bill to be submitted to the Congress of the United States, is certainly a remarkable document. It is based on the assumption that there is at last in power in this country a party which may be appealed to legislate in the interests of some other country. But this is not where the affront comes in. The prayer of the Bermudan legislators coldly ignored one of the sacred fundamental principles upon which the Democratic tariff bill is to be passed-"the tariff is a tax paid by the consumer." This being the Democratic contention, what difference can it make to the Bermudans whether their products are admitted to this country free or only under a high duty?

The Democratic economists in Congress are convinced that the American consumer of Bermuda onions pays the duty and the whole of it, and this conviction will go into their bill. To suggest through the cold formality of a petition that the onion-grower of Bermuda pays the duty or any part thereof to get his product into the American market, is to offer an affront which Chairman Wilson may feel that he must resent in behalf of the whole Democratic party.

If the affront was studied, so much the worse; in which case it might lead to complications with Great Britain, which is Bermuda's boss.

Taking the Back Track on Pensions. Public sentiment has brought the administration to time in the matter of suspended pensions. Accordingly the commissioner of pensions makes the official announcement that the practice of his office with regard to suspensions is to be modified.

In fact it seems that there is to be more abandonment than modification. There is no longer to be a campaign of wholesale suspension, putting the pensioner to his proof to show that he is entitled to what he is receiving.

Suspensions are to come only where the record shows on its tace that the pensioner is not entitled to his pension; "and it is believed that the number who will come under this class will be very Large or small, where the record shows that the pension should not have been granted, it is entirely right to sail by that chart; but the country will watch closely to see that the record sustains the pension commissioner when the assigns this reason for suspending a pension.

Meanwhile the friends of the veter ans and of fair play will rejoice that the light has broken in on this administration. It was time.

Junus Goggin's notion is that one is a majority of three. There can be no other reason for his knocking out his two associates on the bench and decid ing the Sunday opening question on his own sole responsibility. Goggin must be something of an Anarchist.

The President's Health.

The Philadelphia Times is in the hair of its neighbor the Press for giving to the world be dory of the operation per-formed on President Cleveland. The Times calls it "a digrace to journalism."

The correspondent of the Press who furnished the story, and who writes the best letters that come from New York, is a careful, high-grade man. He is distinctly not a sensationalist. In an interview in the Cincinnati Enginer, which may have appeared elsewhere also, Dr. Hasbrouck admitted the truth of the essential statements of the Press publication. Being true, it was right that the story should be printed.

The people of the United States are interested in the health of their President and it is right to inform them con cerning it. The performance of the Press is highly creditable to American journalism.

"The Great Crime of 1873."

The full text of Senator Sherman's speech appears in the Conyressional Record. It goes at length into the history of the act of 1873, by which, the free silver men have said, silver was demonetized in the dark. For years they have howled about "the great crime of 1873." They have denounced it as a fraud on the people and the result of a corrupt conspiracy.

They have sought to convey the false impression that men in Congress at the time had no opportunity to know what they were voting for. Senator Sherman has drawn the record on them and shown by that incontestible proof that no other measure ever submitted to Congress was so thoroughly advertised.

Unusual in its origin, it followed a still more unusual course which gave to it a publicity that was as remarkable as the subsequent misrepresentation of its history. Having been prepared in the treasury department by scientific experts under the direction of John Jay Knox, deputy comptroller of the currency, the secretary of the treasury forwarded it to John Shorman in his capacity of chairman of the senate finance committee.

This communication bears date April 25, 1870, three years before the bill became a law. Eight months after the bill was received by the senate finance committee it was reported to the senate. After debate the bill passed the senate January 10, 1871, every Pacific coast senator supporting it; yeas 36, nays 14. January 13, 1871, on motion of Judge Kelley, chairman of the coinage committee, the house ordered the bill to be printed. After full discussion the bill passed the house, May 27, 1873; yeas 110, nays 18.

The bill had then passed both houses. but not in the same Congress, so the senate took it up again, May 29, 1872, and passed it January 7, 1873. There were slight amendments not touching the main question. The bill went back to the house. There was a conference between the two bodies and the bill be came a law February 12, 1873.

For three successive years the secre tary of the treasury had called the special attention of Congress to the measure. Copies printed on paper with wide margin for notes had been sent to overvbody who it was thought might be able to make useful suggestions. The bill was read several times in the senate and in the house. It was printed thirteen times by order of Congress.

During five sessions it was considered by the finance committee of the senate and the coinage committee of house. It was debated in the senate to the extent of sixty-six columns in the Globe, in the house seventy-eight columns, in all the very respectable total of 144 printed columns of discussion.

Everybody who took any interest in the subject had ample opportunity to know that the old dollar was dropped from the coinage, as it had already disappeared from circulation because its bullion value was greater than its nominal coin value.

Senator Stewart, who supported the bill, gives notice that he will give a version of its history. Before he can spoil the showing made by Senator Sherman he will have to call in the old edition of official records and prepare a new one from his inner consciousness.

The records of Congress and the treasury department close the controversy and the mouths of the howling dervishes of free siver.

SENATOR WOLCOTT reads Senator Hill out of the silver camp. The first thing Mr. Hill knows he will have to take to the woods or begin a short and decisive career of strong drink. His present situation is nearly intolerable to a truly

It was understood that characteristic illustrations were to be a feature of the book. There is not an illustration in it. The production is largely a compilation of old

Out of an appropriation of $00,000 the state board should have offered to World's Fair visitors something very much better than this. The state has been allowed to miss a great opportunity to present its resources in attractive and telling form.

THE Democratic party used to delight in giving expression to the abomination of a treasury surplus. Well, it now has a deficiency to deal with, which it should find a delightsome task.

AFTER a long, hard fight which forms a tragic chapter in the history of Great Britain, home rule for Ireland has passed the house of commons and is now before the lords. Its progress thus far is a proud triumph for Mr. Gladstone.
